

I strongly oppose the proposal to allow the use of cellular telephones aboard airborne aircraft. In most public spaces when cell phone users, ignoring any consideration for others, begin their conversations, it's possible to escape by simply moving out of range of their voices. But in the confines of an airborne aircraft, there is no place to go. The rights of the non-cell phone user need to be respected. Those calls can wait till the plane lands!